

Well-Driller Landing Page — Hero Refinement

Recommended Replacement Direction and Exact Replit Copy

What Is Not Working in the Current Hero

The current visual composition is strong: the Rosenlund laptop and phone immediately prove that Graylock can create a premium, industry-specific well-driller website. The issue is the text hierarchy around it.

The headline, “We Didn’ t Reach Out to Sell You a Generic Website,” is defensive. It is about Graylock’ s intent rather than the well driller’ s immediate opportunity. It also asks the prospect to read a long paragraph before they understand what the website could do for their business. The eyebrow, section-anchor bar, two CTAs, and reassurance line add enough competing text that the first screen feels more like an explanation than a strong first impression.

The hero needs to earn attention in roughly this order:

A familiar business truth → a clear outcome → visual proof of the standard → one low-risk next step.

Why This Is the Best Option

This headline is much shorter, more specific to the person reading it, and immediately connects the website to the quality and work ethic of their crew. It is not a generic agency claim, it does not overpromise Google rankings or leads, and it works equally well for a company that wants more drilling jobs, more pump work, better-quality inquiries, or simply a site that reflects the business correctly.

It also lets the laptop and phone do their job. The device mockup proves the site can look premium; the text says why that matters.

Two Strong Alternative Hooks

Use one of these only if the recommended direction does not match the Graylock voice after you see it in the live layout.

Option	H1	Body copy	Best use case
A — Decision Moment	WHEN A CUSTOMER NEEDS A WELL, THEY CHOOSE WHO LOOKS READY.	Your website should show customers that you serve their area, do the work they need, and are the company they can trust before they call.	Most direct customer-psychology hook; stronger if the page is aimed at owner-operators with outdated or low-credibility sites.
B — Competitive Edge	BE THE WELL DRILLER THEY FEEL GOOD ABOUT CALLING.	We build custom websites that help local customers find you, understand what you do, and choose you with confidence.	Slightly warmer and more brand-led; strongest if Graylock wants a less aggressive tone.

Do not use the original “We Didn’t Reach Out to Sell You a Generic Website” headline elsewhere on the page. Its core point can be carried by the “Why We Called” section lower on the page, where a prospect is ready for that explanation.

Required Layout Simplification

1. Remove the anchor bar from above the hero

Move the WHY WE CALLED • WHAT A BETTER SITE DOES • YOUR FREE DEMO • HOW IT WORKS • PRICING + GUARANTEE anchor strip below the hero, directly before the Why We Called section, or remove it entirely if it does not provide meaningful navigation on mobile.

The strip currently consumes attention before the visitor has seen the primary promise. The hero needs to be the first message after the main navigation.

2. Remove the long body paragraph

Replace the existing five-line paragraph with the two-sentence body copy above. Do not add a second explanatory paragraph in the hero.

3. Use one hero CTA only

Keep only REQUEST MY FREE CUSTOM DEMO as the hero button. Remove SEE HOW THE DEMO WORKS from the first screen. The process can be discovered naturally while scrolling or through the anchor strip after the hero.

The existing primary and secondary CTA treatment gives the visitor two decisions before they understand the first one. A cold-call follow-up page should make the next step obvious.

4. Keep only one reassurance line

Delete the longer microcopy block and use:

Free custom direction. No obligation. You decide after you see something real.

This keeps the risk reversal without adding another paragraph.

5. Reduce vertical copy footprint and protect the visual

Use a max-width of 510px for the left copy block. Set hero body text to approximately 18px on desktop with a relaxed line-height; set the H1 to clamp(42px, 4.5vw, 70px) with no more than two lines. The laptop / phone asset must remain entirely visible on the right and must not be obscured by any gradient stronger than is needed for text contrast.

Recommended desktop hero height: min-height: 620px; max-height: 730px . On mobile, render hero text first and show the contained device asset underneath. Do not crop away the visual proof.

Exact Replit Instruction

Replace the existing well-driller hero copy and simplify the layout. Keep the existing Rosenlund laptop / phone device background and Graylock desktop visual style, but remove the current defensive headline, long paragraph, secondary “See How the Demo Works” action, and long reassurance copy. Move the anchor strip below the hero or remove it if it does not improve mobile navigation. The global header remains unchanged. Use this exact hero copy: Eyebrow: BUILT FOR WELL DRILLERS WHO WANT TO WIN THE CALL H1: YOUR WEBSITE SHOULD WORK / AS HARD AS YOUR CREW. Make the second line Graylock orange. Body: We build custom well-driller websites that make it easier to get found, earn trust fast, and turn service or estimate requests into real conversations. Single CTA: REQUEST MY FREE CUSTOM DEMO Reassurance: Free custom direction. No obligation. You decide after you see something real. Keep the CTA destination as /get-started?industry=well-drilling&intent=free_demo and preserve all campaign parameters. Build the hero mobile-first: text above, contained device proof below, with no crop that hides the laptop or phone.

Decision Summary

The recommended hook is:

YOUR WEBSITE SHOULD WORK AS HARD AS YOUR CREW.

It is the right balance of attention, relevance, credibility, and simplicity. It tells a well driller that Graylock understands the relationship between the work they do and the website that is supposed to support it—without making the opening screen a long sales explanation.
